

REVIEWS

I'm a very basic sandwich guy. I love 'em nice and simple. However, I've never been a man of change. I stick to 2 kinds of cold cut sandwiches, either Boar's Head ham in a sub roll, complete with mayo, American cheese, lettuce, onion, and a dash of pepper, or a Peppermill turkey sandwich with similar fixings. Recently, a friend forced upon me Cajun turkey and fresh prosciutto, in my version of the sandwich world, this was living exotically. I liked, rather, loved them both. Change was good. Take a look at this issue's new and improved reviews section; you'll see exactly what I mean. -Anthony Q. Casanova

Ratings Explained:

100-80 Anything receiving these numbers is pretty damn good. As it nears 100, it nears perfection.

79-50 The feature in question is far from horrible, it's just been executed better in other games.

49-30 The quality is lacking, getting a bit sloppy, reeking of absolute mediocrity.

29-10 The feature has now become more of a distraction, hurting the overall game in question

9-0 Ouch, man, ouch.

We at Foul feel that our ratings categories are so self-explanatory that a life-support dependent vegetable could figure it out. However, this is how the Total Score works: we flex our mathematical muscle and add numbers. That's it. You figure out the rest.

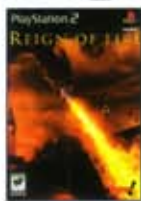

HITMAN 2

A KILLER SEQUEL?

[GET IT? Killer? What? Mom's dead?]

Games We Refused To Play

Reign of Fire

I didn't bother watching its silver screen counterpart during its three and a half day run at my local multiplex, why bother playing a game with its license? A game featuring a pissed-off Spyro coldheartedly disemboweling

McConaughey in the midst of a coke binge would have been nice. If we would have played the game, we probably would have given it a score of 32 out of 100, only because it allows for Christian Bale's immediate death.

Death Row

We are temporarily refusing to pop the cherry on this title because we feel sort of misled. Ever get drunk and hook up with that girl who looked like a supermodel, only she had one extra appendage that you really didn't wish to see? That's what happened with this title. We were expecting jail breakout action and some Suge Night poppin' off some shots, but instead we wind up with some futuristic sports/fighting game. Maybe in the near future we'll give it a spin, but for now All Eyez on Me.

Swingerz Golf

The reason for refusing to play this cute twist on the ever-exciting sport of golf is simple: No Holds Barred's Rip is swinging for a bogey on the box art. Zeus has already shot for par on this course. Not to mention this angle has been played to death - Hot Shots and Cyber Tiger is enough "crazy" golf for us. Also, where are Murray, Aykroyd, and that damned gopher?